Have you ever looked at yourself and Christians around you and thought: 'What a strange group of people we are'? Have you ever wondered if other Christians--even Christians in another country--feel as you do? If so, then this collection of letters may be a comfort to you. George, an Englishman, and Brad, an American, attempt to unravel the mysteries and sort out the cultural differences of two countries divided by a common religion. They discover that the boundaries of stars and stripes, fish and chips, color and colour prove superficial at best, and that deep down there is a common love and faith at the very heart of who they are.
