Book 2 of 'Enchantment' continues the story of the great Magician and the mystical forest in which he lives with his beloved companions the 'forest folk' and where he conjures his incomparable magic while attending to the various worldly, and otherworldly, matters whenever that supreme Master is called upon to do so. All-knowledge and ultimate power is his yet it is not for him to intervene in the affairs of 'mortal man' who, it seems, must work out his own destiny or upward evolution, if he is able to do so, before plunging into the abyss which draws him ever closer as underlying tendencies dictate. Written in the rhythmical style of classical poetry, by another master of his craft, wherein the metered rhyme only heightens the pleasurable reading experience while provoking that higher, more esoteric thought through which the hidden mysteries of 'Enchantment' may only be revealed.
